Preface

The purpose of the publication Kayanway and the Windigos / �51ᓂᐊ᙮ ᐊᑲ᙮ ᒥᓇ ᐃ᙮ᑊᑎᑯᓫ / kayāniwē ēkwa mīna wīntikōk in the original language, with audio as well as a transcription in Western Cree style syllabics adapted to the local Island Lake Dialect and accompanied by an English free translation, is to preserve a record of one of the many treasured legends that have been an expression of the people since time immemorial.

No individual can fairly claim sole ownership of a legend or other traditional lore, but the rendition of the story captured in this record—actually, a collection of Kayanway events—is that of Mrs. Mary Mason, Elder at St. Theresa Point First Nation, Manitoba. The drawings to illustrate the text were prepared by Leslie P. Monias, a local artist. Mr. Billy Joe Flett wrote the free translation, and Harriet Harper wrote the syllabic version of the text. The audio recording, the compilation and the editing of the written text with supplementary phonemic representation of the audio files were prepared by David Westfall, Assistant Professor at Brandon University. The contributors have worked collaboratively to create the bilingual text, also available on the accompanying CD-ROM, which includes audio and text files. The audio tracks will play in CD players and in all up-do-date computers that will play audio CDs.

A premise of the publication is that such unique cultural material must be preserved and made available in the original language of the people who can still tell the stories. While a translation is helpful for nonnative speakers, it cannot capture the full meaning and intent of the original story. Cultural concepts like that of the windigo (/wīntikō/, wīhtikow in Cree) defy accurate translation into other languages. They have to be learned within the context of the original stories, which may vary noticeably from one language community to another. The traditional stories and legends are facing rapid extinction everywhere as ever fewer people are left who can tell the complete stories in the original language.

Any future royalties from this material will be used to support the preservation of the aboriginal language at St. Theresa Point. The local language support team, whoever they may be in the future, will have free use of this material for teaching purposes. Extracts may be taken for adaptation to appropriate grade levels.

Acknowledgements

Many native speakers of the Island Lake language have contributed to the preparation of this volume. First of all, the editor wishes to acknowledge the encouragement and many hours of help in proofreading and in syllabics preparation by the late Norman Monias, a great-uncle of the illustrator, Leslie P. Monias. Without Norman's valued input, the precursor to this work, the out-of-print English-Island Lake Dictionary of Idioms (1994, 1995) would never have been completed. We were encouraged by that experience to move on to attempt the present documentation of a remarkable piece of authentic local lore thanks to Norman's patience and understanding. The language analyses build on earlier, foundational grammatical studies by Rogers, Todd and Shrofel. (See) With no reliable, comprehensive dictionary to refer to, the work has been arduous, and may still be subject to correction.

The typescript has been proofread by the editor and several native speakers of the Island Lake Language. Among the proofreader-contributors are Denise Flett, David Munroe and Tom Little. Tom helped clarify elements of the syllabic text and suggested alternate interpretations, which have been integrated into the final draft where possible.

The goal is to have the written text correspond closely with the spoken words of the audio recording. What the reader hears should also be what appears in print. For the Island Lake, two writing systems are employed throughout—the Cree Syllabics (Western style) and a phonemic alphabetic system used by professional linguists, which is based on the International Phonetic Alphabet.

My story is about the windigo. It begins from the time a group of windigos were travelling throughout the land. According to legend, they were travelling and stopping to make camps along their routes. They were going about in search of human beings whom they would kill and eat. (Those windigos were cannibals by nature.) [Track 1]

The head windigo and his five sons

On one particular day, they made camp; there were many of them comprising this group. The head windigo had five sons. There were other old windigos in the group, which was one of five groups travelling together. The head windigo set out with his five sons to look for human beings. Then he left. He put on his snowshoes and left. [Track 2]

He doesn't even take off his snowshoes.

When he arrived back in camp late that evening, he didn't even take off his snowshoes as he entered his wigwam. To the surprise of his family, he just went and rolled over into the wigwam. His sons were all at home at the time. They remarked, "What could be the matter with him? Why does he act this way?"

One of the sons said, "He must have found something on his travels." So, they immediately attended to their father and helped him take off his snowshoes. They prepared an evening meal for him. After he finished eating, his sons asked him to tell them about his day's travel. He sat and contemplated for a while. Then he told his sons, "I saw someone today. He was alone." His youngest son said to him, "Maybe it was Kayanway that you saw." [Track 3]

"No, I don't think so," replied the windigo. (All windigos were well aware that there was a being called Kayanway somewhere on the land.)

"Then tell us about this person that you saw," said his sons.

Go to where I saw him, because he said he would be there again in the morning." The group spent a sleepless night, as they were anxious and set to travel.

Morning came and everyone got up, and their wives too. They (the men) prepared to travel to where their father had seen the human. As they arrived at their destination along the shoreline, they could see the human being they would kill at the site of the beaver lodge. About halfway to the beaver lodge, the youngest son suddenly turned to face the others and said, "See what I told you! That looks like Kayanway over there. Look at him!"

They all observed him as he used an ice chisel to cut a hole in the ice near the beaver lodge in order to set up a beaver snare. Kayanway was using a two-ended ice chisel and kept flipping it over as he cut the hole in the ice. [Track 5]

And so the young men went and cut some small logs, which they carried and placed near the beaver lodge.

While the young windigo men were busy with their task, Kayanway and the old man windigo set to work at the beaver lodge. Kayanway was thirsty from all the work and proceeded to loosen his jacket and shirt and then lay down to drink water from the hole they had made.

Old man windigo watched him closely as he was drinking. Kayanway looked good for eating. He was so fat and stocky in appearance that old man windigo couldn't help thinking that he would make a wholesome meal for him and his family. [Track 7]

Kayanway spears the windigo and pushes him into the ice hole.

As Kayanway was drinking, he noticed that the windigo had taken the ice chisel and was in the act of spearing him (lunging at him) as he drank from the ice-hole. Kayanway could see the windigo's reflection in the water and remarked, "What are you up to?"

Old man windigo said, "I was just testing the ice chisel for its correct balance."

As they continued working, old man windigo also wanted to drink from the water hole, so he proceeded to loosen his shirt and jacket, revealing some nasty scars on his body. He got down on his hands and knees just as Kayanway had done and started to drink water from the ice hole.

As old man windigo was drinking, Kayanway speared him into the hole and under the ice (water). As he speared him, the windigo blurted out, "This human has ended my life!" [Track 8]

The young windigo climbs a tree.

As the young men were working, they said, "Did you hear the old man say something? One of the sons said, "I thought I heard him say, 'This human has ended my life,' but I don't think that would happen."

Kayanway then proceeded to go to where the young windigo men were working. He had prepared five arrows, one for each of the five windigo sons of this group. He killed all of them but noticed that he had one arrow left. Then he noticed that a set of tracks left the group's trail and headed into the deep woods. He followed the tracks and soon came upon the young windigo climbing up a tree, hiding from him. This young windigo said to him, "Do not shoot me! I'm really a human being … I am not a windigo! The windigo women approach Kayanway.

Kayanway said to his mother-in-law, "Hush, there are many more of the windigo out there, and I shall try to get them too."

The next day, Kayanway set out again on another trek to try to locate other windigo groups in the area. He went back to the same place and waited. Sure enough, before long he saw the windigo women approaching. They were wearing bear-paw type snowshoes.

Old lady windigo suddenly stopped and asked Kayanway, "Where is my husband?"

Kayanway replied, "You will find your husband completely floating under the ice by the beaver water-hole near the beaver lodge."

Kayanway goes after the old lady windigo.

Upon hearing the news, she removed her carry-all bag from her back, opened it and threw a bola (stone weapon) at Kayanway. Kayanway dodged the missile, which just missed his head but knocked off his headgear!

In return, he picked up the stone missile from the snow and went after old lady windigo and caught up to her. [Track 13]

He stepped on her snowshoe, causing the old lady to fall forward into the snow. As the old lady lay prostrate on the snow, he took aim at her behind with the weapon. At each motion, the old windigo woman flinched and Kayanway said to her, "My, you're quite a mover," to which remark the old windigo woman retorted, "Well, that's because I have raised quite a few human beings in this world." With that last remark, Kayanway threw the old woman's own weapon at her behind and killed her instantly. He said, "This old lady has come closest to killing me!"

Then Kayanway killed all the remaining windigo women in the group. [Track 14]

Kayanway then set out from this location in search of other groups of windigo to kill in the region. On this trip, he came across two human beings at a camp. He visited the two men for a while.

Then they all set out together. They stopped at the shore of a little lake, making a fire to have lunch. As they were sitting at their campfire, they noticed on the lake what appeared to be a (cut) spruce tree being blown across the lake in front of them.

One of the men said to the other, "Do you remember seeing a spruce tree marker on this lake before?" The other man answered, "No, I cannot say that I ever saw a spruce tree marker on this lake before." [Track 15]

A windigo pretends to be a spruce tree.

It so happened that a windigo was holding onto the spruce tree and pretending that it was being blown across the lake.

Kayanway and the two men seized the clever windigo and brought him to their campfire. They made the windigo drink cups of warm and hot water, and the windigo, feeling quite sick, began to throw up a lot in the process.

All of the vomit was pieces of ice and ice water. In the end, the windigo died in front of them.

The story goes that Kayanway had the supernatural ability to remove the heart of the windigos prior to actually killing them; therefore, no windigo would have had a chance of winning a battle against Kayanway. [Track 16]

A windigo camp was always prepared for any chance arrival of humans. In the cold season, they made their entrance or doorway of ice so that anyone entering would slip and slide into their dwelling.

At one time there was a pregnant woman who came by and slipped into the dwelling of a windigo. She was killed by the windigo, but one of the older windigo women said to the others, "Do not kill the unborn child! I'll smother it myself! ... [Track 18]

The windigo comes very close to spearing the children.

This captive infant was not killed but was raised by the windigo to be eaten later when it became fat. There were two captive children at the camp. One day they decided to hide from the windigo, and so they wandered away and hid in the snow by a small lake.

The windigos noticed that the two children were missing. One of the windigo men tracked them to the small lake. He tried to find them in their hiding places under the snow. Using a pole as a spear or poking stick, he started to poke every inch of the lake, the ice and the snowdrifts as well as the snow banks of the lake. Sometimes he came very close to spearing the children under the snow. In the end, he failed to locate and slay the children.

The children are again taken prisoner by the windigo.

From there, the children continued to travel across the land. They happened to come across a windigo camp and were again taken prisoner by the windigo. By that time, the children were hungry and very skinny.

The windigo camp decided to keep the children until they became fat. One windigo asked the children, "Where do you get fat when you are really fat?" The children told the windigo what he wanted to know, so in their captivity they were fed well every day. The windigo would continually test and see if the children were getting fat by using a knife to cut their skin. At times the children had sores from the numerous cuts inflicted on them. [Track 20]

On their journey, the children come across Kayanway.

On many occasions during their captivity, the windigo tied the children up while they went hunting on the land for human beings. On one of these (hunting) trips, one of the children managed to free himself and in turn untied the other child, so they set off again to try to escape the windigo.

It so happened that on their journey they came upon Kayanway. Kayanway confronted the windigos who were pursuing the two children and told them, "You will not continue to live on the land anyway," because his mission was to eliminate all windigos from the earth. He said to them, " I will just take your heart when I see you. You are not to hunt over here because you eat my kin, the human beings." That's what he told the windigos. [Track 21]

There was another camp of windigos in the region. At this camp, there were two pairs of windigo sharing a wigwam. They were an old couple (and their sons). One day their sons were getting ready to hunt for human beings.

After the young men had left, one of the old windigos said to the other windigo, "What did you ask your son to bring you when he gets back?" The old windigo answered, "I requested he bring me a barbequed human liver. And what about you? What was your request?"

"Well, I requested my son to bring me a roasted unborn child when he comes home," the other replied. And from the pregnant woman, she wanted her daughter ('companion'?) to cut out the the unborn baby and bring it to her.

Evening passed and the two windigo sons did not return. The other windigos of the camp started to search for the missing windigos in the immediate area. They were unsuccessful in finding them because Kayanway had met them, thus ending forever their nomadic life of hunting human prey. [Track 23]

A Few Notes on Orthography and Grammar

Vowel lengths are not usually marked in syllabic writing at the community level, nor are some of the standard symbols used regularly, for example, the syllabic character for /h/. In fact, the "(h) is sometimes used instead of the ' for /p/ . Phonemic /s/ and /š/ are not distinguished in the syllabics used at Island Lake. The two sibilants are phonetically very close, unlike the s and sh contrast in English and in some of the southern Ojibwe dialects. In spoken ILD, one of the allophones of /s/ is [θ], a usually unvoiced "th" sound (theta) which may surface as a voiced [ð] (edh) between vowels. Syllabics writers always indicate the s, with no special character for the theta or edh.

A lack of standardization across the communities that use syllabic characters contributes to confusion and limits the usefulness of the otherwise remarkable orthographic system. In this publication, we use the system as it is commonly applied at St. Theresa Point. Not all writers follow the same guidelines, however. There is occasional use of the archaic 'r' syllabic symbol set, in which the 'r' characters resemble a grappling hook. It appears not to be available in any of the computer fonts in TrueType format, and so we have had to substitute the n-characters or l-characters in place of the 'r'. Not found in the Island Lake phonemic inventory, the 'r' is a foreign sound, but the marginally phonemic 'l' is easily rendered in the Island Lake Dialect.

The variety of Oji-Cree used at Island Lake is distinct from the related varieties in Ontario in its more numerous recent borrowings from Swampy Cree. However, the grammar remains essentially Ojibwe, as can be heard in the grammatical inflections and in the overwhelmingly non-Cree basic vocabulary, constituting about 90% of the lexicon. (See Shrofel 1977:131.)

Island Lake Dialect grammar is very different from English grammar. As a member of the Algonquian language family, ILD has different parts of speech and different kinds of verb and noun inflection than have English and other Indo-European languages. Nouns (NA or NI) are classified as 'animate' or 'inanimate', the two nominal genders of the Cree and Ojibwe (Anishinabe) languages. Obviative forms, which are used to distinguish different third persons from the proximate, or main, in-focus third person(s) occur frequently in the narrative. Inflected verbs are labeled according to their order (Independent, Conjunct, Imperative). Particles like adverbs, clitics and certain prefixes are not inflected. For reliable analyses of the grammar, consult the professional studies. A few relevant professional studies are listed below:

An English version of Kayanway events was published by James Stevens and Carl Ray in 1971 as Sacred Legends of the Sandy Lake Cree (Toronto: McClelland and Stewart, p. 135-144). Because there is no audio recording and no transcript of the original language, the linguistic accuracy of the 1971 publication cannot be determined by comparing versions. Mary Mason's Kayanway tale corresponds in approximate content to pages 139-144 of the more detailed anthology by Stevens and Ray. A full version was told by the late father of our translator, but it, too, was recorded only as a written English interpretation.

Glossary

Abbreviations

OBV   Obviative. Obviation is an Algonquian means of distinguishing a different 3rd person noun or pronoun from the main (proximate) one within a given context. The person number 3' is 3rd person sg/pl animate obviative; 0' is inanimate singular obviative, 0'p inaminate plural obviative. The NI obviative suffix is –eni (-ini). Obviation is also expressed in the verb inflections.

      The other grammatical persons are 1 (I, me); 1p (we, us exclusive—excluding 'you'); 2 (you sg); 2p (you pl); 2[1] (we, us inclusive—including 'you').

OC   Oji-Cree   ILD   Island Lake Dialect

LOC   Locative (noun suffix)

Verb Stem types:
     II   Inanimate Intransitive (with inanimate or impersonal actor)
     AI   Animate Intransitive (with animate actor)
     TI   Transitive (with inanimate goal)
     TA   Transitive Animate (with animate goal)

Verb Orders (3):
        IND   Independent
        CONJ   Conjunct
        IMPER   Imperative (for commands and prohibitions)

Mode Dubitative   Dubitative mode indicates events of a "doubtful nature" (Shrofel 1981:195). See Shrofel 1981:195, 244-245 for a discussion of the dubitative mode in ILD. Most verbs are in the Indicative mode.
        Other modes are discussed and analysed in detail by Shrofel 1981, chapters 4 & 5.

Parts of Speech:
NA   Noun, Animate   NI   Noun, Inanimate
V   Verb (stem types: II, AI, TA,TI) PR   Pronoun   IPC   Indeclinable Particle
                                                    (uninflected word or clitic)

REDUPLICATION: As in Cree, ILD reduplication on verb stems may indicate ongoing activity, intensity of action, or repetition. See Shrofel 1981:516-522 on types of reduplication in ILD.

Glossary entries are computer-sorted; vowel length and hyphens are ignored in the process. If there are multiple occurrences of a lexical item, only the first occurrence is indicated by track and page number.

For ILD, there is a strong tendency to lengthen initial vowels of verb stems, noun stems and prefixes, even where the vowels are historically short. To include vowel length in sorting would not be useful to most readers. Listening closely to the recording is recommended.
